

Editorial: FUNAI Journal of Humanities and Social Sciences

Volume Two, Issue 1

We are once more delighted to present this issue of the FUNAI Journal of Humanities and Social Sciences (FJHSS). This issue contains six journals from authors stemming from academic institutions across the geo-political zones of Nigeria. FUNAI Journal of Humanities and Social Sciences place emphasis on the originality of the paper, contribution to knowledge and policy implications of the study. It is our desire that we get better at this with each issue published. Due to the journals wide scope that encompasses humanities and social sciences, this issue has a fine mix of indigenous works from different fields across the country.

FJHSS has a tradition of providing detailed review comments to authors' manuscripts no matter the outcome of the review decision to publish. This is because we believe that, beyond publication, authors should learn and add value via the constructive and developmental feedback from the review process of this journal. FJHSS' double blind peer review mechanism remains a rigorous approach that ultimately leads to academic development. At this juncture, we will want to appreciate our vast team of internal and external associate editors for their dedication, commitment and availability for the services rendered. Special mention is made of the editorial assistants: Chinedum Jude Nwasum and Monday Igwe for their selfless service and support to the progress of the journal.

In the spirit of appreciation, we recognise the crucial role authors play in contributing high quality journals for publication, without these efforts, our desire to publish will not be accomplished. For the scholars whose manuscripts were not accepted for publication, we hope that the comments from the reviewers will help in the improvement of your work. Finally we thank the University management for providing the platform and giving us the necessary support for the progress made so far.

FUNAI Journal of Humanities and Social Sciences currently has two issues, with which we have been able to apply for consideration into some indexing bodies. All necessary preparations and actions have been taken to pursue this dream and it will be our great delight that this journal is indexed in prestigious indexing bodies across the globe (e.g., Thomson Reuters, Social Science Research Network, and SCOPUS).

We continue to invite works from within and outside Nigeria to publish with FJHSS as we advance the humanities and social sciences with contribution to knowledge. We equally implore you to visit our website for updates and calls for publication as they are released. We are convinced that you will enjoy reading this issue.

Prof Philip Omoke and Dr Denis N. Yuni

Editor-in-Chief and Managing Editor